Short Biography

Editor, Resurgence Magazine
Founding Team and Program Director, Schumacher College

Satish Kumar was born in Rajasthan, India, in 1936. In 1961, news from Britain reached him: The ninety-year-old philosopher and peace campaigner Bertrand Russell had been arrested for his anti-nuclear activities and sentenced to a week in prison. Kumar saw it as a call to action - if a ninety-year-old man was prepared to go to jail for peace, what could he, a young man in his twenties, contribute to the struggle? Together with his friend Prabhakar Menon, Satish walked to the four nuclear capitals - Moscow, Paris, London and Washington. Their journey began at the grave of Mahatma Gandhi and ended, two and a half years later at the grave of John F Kennedy.

For the past thirty years Satish has edited Resurgence Magazine - which promotes an ecological way of living - and he has pioneered the Human Scale Education movement.

In 1991, Schumacher College, an international residential centre for the study of ecological and spiritual values, was founded. Satish was part of Schumacher's founding group and is now the college's Program Director. Schumacher College was founded on the conviction that a new vision is needed for society, its values and its relationship to the earth. Over the last decade the College has become a centre of excellence with an international reputation for the inspiration, quality and breadth of its teaching.

In July 2000, Satish was awarded an Honorary Doctorate in Education from the University of Plymouth. In July 2001 he was awarded an Honorary Doctorate in Literature from the University of Lancaster.

In November 2001, Satish was presented with the Jannalal Bajaj International Award for Promoting Gandhian Values Abroad.

Satish teaches, lectures and runs workshops internationally on reverential ecology, holistic education and voluntary simplicity. His autobiography "Path Without Destination" was published by William Morrow in the U.S.A. in 1999. The paperback edition was printed in March 2000.
